FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS ONLY.

78 UNSOLICITED SUBMISSIONS ACCEPTED

78 Photography Magazines and Website accepting submissions all year long

PhotoVogue (Monday Submission): Managed by the editorial team of Vogue Italia, PhotoVogue is one of the most prestigious digital scouting platforms in the world. Every Monday, the platform opens its "Monday Submission" window, allowing photographers to upload their work directly to the Vogue database. The project is not just a gallery; it's a career-launching tool where editors regularly select artists for digital features, brand collaborations, and the iconic PhotoVogue Festival in Milan. Their mission is to champion diversity and new visual languages in fashion and documentary photography. They seek images that push the boundaries of traditional beauty and storytelling. While they accept single shots, they value "Vogue-standard" quality—work that feels sophisticated, intentional, and culturally relevant. CLICK HERE

British Journal of Photography (BJP): Established in 1854, BJP is the world's oldest and most influential photography title, operating as a high-end platform for the global photographic community. The project focuses on the intersection of fine-art photography and documentary practice, aiming to showcase works that define the visual language of our time. They maintain a rigorous editorial standard, exploring how technology and social shifts transform the way we create and consume images. They seek editorial pitches for their "Intelligence" and "Projects" sections, focusing on well-documented stories and innovative portraiture. Proposals must include a concise project summary and a link to a selection of images that demonstrate technical mastery and a unique narrative perspective. CLICK HERE

F-Stop Magazine: Founded in 2003, F-Stop is an online publication that provides a democratic and accessible platform for contemporary photography from around the world. The project is structured around bimonthly themed issues, aiming to create a collective visual dialogue where different perspectives on a single topic can coexist. It serves as a vital resource for emerging artists looking to build their exhibition history without the barriers of entry fees. They seek photography that responds directly to their specific calls for entry. Submissions should be a coherent body of work accompanied by a short artist statement. They are open to all genres, provided the work is conceptually linked to the issue's theme. CLICK HERE

Musée Magazine: This dynamic publication, based in New York and available in digital and print, positions itself at the avant-garde of global visual culture. The project is dedicated to promoting artists who are "fearless" in their creativity, with a style that ranges from eccentric and provocative to thought-provoking and elegant. It functions as a high-level exhibition space on paper for the international art scene. They accept submissions for their "Emerging Artist" and themed sections, seeking work that is conceptually strong and visually arresting. They look for photography that fits a high-end art context and pushes the boundaries of traditional genres like fashion and portraiture. CLICK HERE

Noice Magazine: Noice is a publication and community focused on photographers with a keen eye for pattern, geometry, and humor in the everyday world. The project promotes "conscious seeing," encouraging artists to find beauty and curiosity in the mundane aspects of life. It serves as a highly inclusive platform that values clarity, minimalism, and a graphic approach to the visual environment. They seek photography characterized by clean lines, bold colors, and an organized aesthetic. Submissions are open to everyone and are free, favoring works that document the built environment or street scenes with a unique, deadpan perspective. They value a consistent "vibe" throughout the series. CLICK HERE

Source Magazine: Based in Belfast, Source is a quarterly magazine focusing on contemporary photography with a strong emphasis on critical thinking and cultural research. The project publishes emerging work alongside reviews and academic news, providing a serious yet accessible context for the social role of the image. They are interested in how photography documents history and personal narratives in a changing global landscape. They have an open submission policy for their "New Work" section, seeking projects with a strong conceptual or documentary basis. Ideally, they look for unpublished work that benefits from a critical editorial eye and a deep engagement with the photographic medium. CLICK HERE

LensWork: The philosophy of LensWork is that photography is a way of life and a primary means of communication, rather than just a technical craft. The project focuses on the creative process and the photographer's personal journey, publishing works that are deeply introspective and technically masterful. It is one of the few high-end titles where a significant portion of content comes from unsolicited submissions. They seek portfolios that demonstrate a clear, mature creative voice across all genres, from landscape to portraiture. Work must show a deep commitment to the craft and a unique vision, presented as a coherent sequence of images that tell a complete story. CLICK HERE

Photographize: This multidisciplinary society is dedicated to connecting a global audience with the work of both renowned and emerging artists through a high-quality magazine and a massive social media presence. The project focuses on the sheer visual impact of the image, curating "beauty" in all its contemporary forms, from digital art to traditional lens-based photography. Their mission is to offer artists a global stage with high visibility. They constantly review submissions for their "Featured Artist" sections, seeking visually striking imagery that has a strong, immediate emotional or aesthetic appeal. They value works that are ready for a digital-first audience but maintain artistic integrity. CLICK HERE

Shots Magazine: In an era dominated by high-resolution digital screens, Shots is a long-running independent journal of fine-art photography printed exclusively in black and white. The project is known for its democratic and raw presentation, favoring a personal and atmospheric aesthetic over commercial or technical polish. It is a reader-supported publication that values the tactile and timeless nature of the monochrome print. They seek eclectic and personal photographic series that utilize the unique power of black and white. They are interested in work that is atmospheric, experimental, and deeply personal, often focusing on the human condition or the mysteries of the visual world. CLICK HERE

Ciel Variable: This Montreal-based magazine examines photographic practices that intersect with contemporary art, digital technology, and global culture. The project is focused on the "image" as a tool for social and cultural analysis, often featuring works that challenge traditional definitions of the medium and explore the complexities of modern identity. They provide a vital space for critical discourse and visual experimentation in the Canadian and international scene. They accept proposals for contributions and information on new projects, seeking photography that explores media culture and the environment. Material should be conceptually grounded and offer a new perspective on contemporary life. CLICK HERE

Loupe Magazine: Launched in 2016, Loupe has built a strong reputation for elevating the work of emerging photographers who tackle significant contemporary themes. The project recognizes photography's unique ability to document reality, spark debate, and make sense of a chaotic world through powerful visual narratives. It acts as a bridge between the academic environment and the professional industry for new storytellers. They seek contemporary documentary and social-interest photography that shatters the status quo. They look for series that have a strong narrative arc and a clear sense of purpose, representing a diverse range of global voices. CLICK HERE

Perimetro: Perimetro is a Milan-based urban storytelling project that aims to give a soul back to the city by documenting its neighborhoods, faces, and transformations. The mission is to create a collective sentimental archive, treating the urban environment as a living, breathing organism. While rooted in Italy, the project has expanded globally, always focusing on the human element within the urban fabric. They seek photographic "tales" rather than single shots, preferring environmental portraiture and social research. Material must be sent with a narrative text that explains the photographer's personal link to the subject or territory. CLICK HERE

The Pictorial List: A highly curated platform celebrating the power of visual storytelling. For 2026, they have opened submissions for "Pictorial Stories," a section dedicated to projects that go beyond the single image to form a complex narrative. It is an ideal channel for photographers working on long-term projects or visual essays that require deep "reading. CLICK HERE

Lucy's Magazine: A high-end fashion and beauty publication that reserves significant space for visual stories with a profound message. They accept series of 6 to 20 photos and are particularly interested in work that displays obsessive attention to detail (hair, makeup, styling) while maintaining a cinematic narrative. CLICK HERE

C41 Magazine: C41 is a creative production house and magazine that explores the boundary between photography, fashion, and lifestyle with a cinematic and sophisticated approach. The project is driven by "visual curiosity" and a desire to look at the ordinary in an extraordinary way through a very defined, minimalist aesthetic. It aims to tell stories of people and places through a timeless visual elegance and a high-end design. They seek unconventional fashion editorials, travel stories, and architectural studies. They value works that feel contemporary and "cool" but possess a deep artistic soul and a clear narrative direction. CLICK HERE

Pellicola Magazine: This publication is a dedicated tribute to the materiality, texture, and slowness of analog photography in a digital world. The project was born to value those who still choose film as their primary medium, celebrating the grain, the chemical emotion, and the "perfect imperfections" of the analog process. It aims to build a global community of film enthusiasts who share a love for the tangible image. They seek exclusively works shot on film (35mm, medium, or large format), preferring intimate series and poetic landscapes. Submissions must be accompanied by technical details and a text explaining the choice of the analog medium. CLICK HERE

Phroom: Phroom is a highly rigorous curated platform that aims to redefine contemporary visual art through a draconian selection of "lens-based" works. The project serves as an avant-garde archive for artists working on abstraction, minimalism, and conceptual research, focusing on the future of the image and its digital evolution. It has an extremely clean and sophisticated aesthetic that mirrors the world of high-end contemporary galleries. They seek portfolios of pure research that challenge the traditional boundaries of the medium. They do not accept traditional street photography; the material must be "gallery-ready" and conceptually innovative. CLICK HERE

Witness Journal: Witness Journal is a platform dedicated to social and documentary photography, operating on the belief that reality must be documented with ethics and honesty. The project provides a voice to marginalized communities and stories that major media often overlook, promoting photography as a tool for civil engagement and collective memory. It is a non-profit association that values the informative power of the image. They seek reportages and documentary stories (15-20 images) with very detailed captions. They value the social weight of the work and the photographer's ability to engage deeply with the subject. CLICK HERE

Ignant: Based in Berlin, Ignant is an award-winning online magazine that focuses on the intersection of art, architecture, design, and photography. The editorial project is guided by a clean, minimalist German aesthetic, emphasizing precision, natural light, and perfectly balanced compositions. The mission is to curate the very best of global creativity for a sophisticated audience. They seek photography of architecture, interiors, and minimalist landscapes that have a "fine-art" look. Material should be sent as a complete series that demonstrates a high level of technical skill and a cohesive visual language. CLICK HERE

Kaltblut Magazine: Kaltblut represents the wild, queer, and multicultural soul of Berlin's underground creative scene. The project is an explosion of creative freedom, mixing avant-garde fashion, electronic music, and provocative photography to destroy aesthetic taboos and gender barriers. It aims to give a space to the "punk" and unconventional visions of the world. They seek fashion editorials, extreme portraiture, and visual projects exploring the human body and identity. The work should be daring, visually intense, and unapologetically modern, favoring photographers who take significant creative risks. CLICK HERE

Huck Magazine: Huck celebrates radical culture, independence, and the spirit of resistance, documenting protest movements, subcultures, and those living on the fringes of society. The photography is authentic, gritty, and documentary-focused, aiming to tell stories of personal and collective transformation from a grassroots perspective. The project is deeply rooted in the DIY ethos of skate and surf culture but has evolved into a global news platform. They seek street photography, documentary reportage on subcultures, and activism-based stories. They prefer works that show intimate access to the subject and a strong social commitment. CLICK HERE

Archivo Papers Journal (APJ): APJ è una prestigiosa pubblicazione accademica e di ricerca dedicata allo studio dell'immagine d'archivio e alle pratiche documentarie contemporanee. Il progetto si colloca all'intersezione tra la teoria critica e la produzione artistica, fungendo da piattaforma per ricercatori, curatori e artisti che esplorano il ruolo degli archivi nella cultura visiva. La loro missione è promuovere una comprensione interdisciplinare della fotografia, analizzando come le immagini costruiscano memorie, storie e identità. A differenza delle riviste fotografiche tradizionali, APJ cerca contributi che abbiano un forte rigore intellettuale, favorendo lavori che interrogano il mezzo fotografico stesso. Sono aperti a saggi visivi, articoli di ricerca e recensioni critiche. Cercano progetti che utilizzino materiali d'archivio in modo innovativo o che riflettano sulle sfide etiche e politiche della documentazione visiva nel mondo contemporaneo.CLICK HERE

Booooooom: One of the most-visited art blogs globally, Booooooom focuses on high-quality creative work across all mediums, with a particular emphasis on photography. The project is a major launchpad for young photographers, favoring works that have a strong "vibe," a unique conceptual hook, or a fresh perspective on the ordinary. Their mission is to foster a massive community of creators who share an interest in "good art." They seek photography that is visually striking and possesses a unique aesthetic signature. They are very open to personal, non-commercial projects that show a unique way of seeing the world. CLICK HERE

Somewhere Magazine: A lifestyle and photography publication focused on "aesthetic" and cinematic mood. The project is atmospheric and nostalgic, looking for images that evoke a sense of wanderlust or quiet urban solitude through the emotional impact of light and color. It is highly visual and relies on the immediate feeling a photograph can provide. They seek single shots or small series that look like movie stills or dreamlike travel memories. Minimalist landscapes and quiet city moments are their preferred material. They are an excellent destination for photographers whose work is driven by atmosphere and "vibe." CLICK HERE

Subjectively Objective: This is a contemporary landscape and documentary photography platform and publishing house rooted in the "New Topographics" tradition. The project examines the relationship between humans and the environment without romanticizing the land, focusing on urban sprawl, industrial decay, and the quiet reality of the modern world. Their mission is to document the "man-altered" landscape with a deadpan and objective eye. They seek photography that documents the built environment and the modern landscape. They are particularly interested in series that show a consistent and rigorous exploration of a specific territory. CLICK HERE

Fraction Magazine: A monthly online publication that prides itself on being a curated space for high-quality fine-art photography. The project aims to provide a serious platform for photographers who have moved beyond the "single shot" phase into deep, meaningful, and coherent series. Their mission is to showcase the best of contemporary photography to a global audience of curators and editors. They seek cohesive portfolios (usually 15-20 images) with a strong artistic statement. They are highly respected in the fine-art community for their focus on emerging talent and their commitment to high-quality curation. CLICK HERE

The Eye of Photography: Based in Paris, The Eye of Photography is one of the most widely read digital dailies in the professional photography world. Every single day, they publish multiple portfolios and stories from every corner of the globe. The project functions as a living archive of world photography, covering breaking news, major exhibitions, and new talent scouts. Their mission is to inform industry professionals—including curators, gallery owners, and editors—about the most relevant shifts in the medium. They feature a dedicated "Readers' Gallery" where they publish unsolicited work submitted by their audience, offering massive international exposure to photographers at all career stages. CLICK HERE

Dienacht Magazine: Dienacht is a magazine focused on photography, design, and subcultures, intentionally avoiding commercial genres like high fashion in favor of timeless and gritty photography. The project is not interested in chasing the latest digital trends but looks for photographic series that possess a unique soul and a strong personal style. Their mission is to create a publication that is a work of art in itself. They seek photographic series that are cohesive and demonstrate a mature artistic voice. They value works that are atmospheric, experimental, and show a deep engagement with the subject. CLICK HERE

Blow Photo: Blow Photo is a premium, limited-edition fine-art publication that treats each issue as a thematic narrative, showcasing the best in contemporary photography. The project aims to provide a high-end exhibition space on paper, with each issue becoming a collector's item due to its production quality and curated content. Their mission is to promote photography as a serious fine-art form. They seek fine-art portfolios that can be integrated into their thematic issues. They value high production quality, artistic depth, and a clear conceptual link between the images and the issue's theme. CLICK HERE

Der Greif: Der Greif is an award-winning organization for contemporary photography that operates at the cutting edge of digital and physical curation. The project is highly experimental and challenges traditional notions of authorship by remixing single images from different artists to create new, collective visual stories. Their mission is to explore the power of the image in a networked world. They seek individual "strong" images or small series for their guest-curated rooms and print issues. They are particularly interested in photography that is bold, experimental, and capable of standing alone or being part of a collage. CLICK HERE

Fotomission: is a US-based non-profit organization dedicated to promoting photography as a powerful catalyst for social change and cultural preservation. Their flagship project, "Cultural Expressions," serves as a permanent online gallery and publication series designed to document and celebrate the immense diversity of human traditions across the globe. Their mission is to use the photographic arts to foster mutual understanding between peoples and to visually preserve cultural heritages that may be at risk of disappearing. Unlike fashion or abstract art magazines, Fotomission seeks a documentary approach that is pure, ethical, and deeply humanistic. They constantly accept unsolicited submissions from photographers who have produced visual essays on festivals, rituals, craftsmanship, or the lifestyles of specific communities. They seek cohesive series (usually 10-15 images) that tell a complete cultural story, accompanied by descriptive text to contextualize the work. CLICK HERE

Juxtapoz: An iconic magazine for contemporary art and urban culture, Juxtapoz documents the energy of the street, from graffiti and skate culture to pop-surrealism. The project treats these subjects with the same critical respect as high art, focusing on the vibrant and often rebellious pulse of modern cities. Their mission is to provide a voice to the underground and the unconventional.

They seek photography that documents urban culture and the fringes of society. They love vibrant, high-energy imagery that captures a specific cultural movement or a unique street-level perspective. CLICK HERE

Ain't-Bad: This is a publisher of contemporary books and magazines focusing on the "next generation" of photographers and the state of the world today. The project is interested in the complexities of modern life, from environmental issues to personal identity, aiming to support artists as they transition to professional careers. Their mission is to be a bridge between the academic world and the industry. They seek cohesive fine-art or documentary "bodies of work." Their "General Submission" is always open and is a primary tool for scouting new talent for their publications and online features. CLICK HERE

Maake Magazine: Maake is an artist-run publication that functions as a curated gallery space on paper, often pairing photographers with other visual artists to foster dialogue. The project focuses on multidisciplinary exchange and the common visual themes that recur across different artistic practices. Their mission is to support the independent artist community with a high-visibility platform. They seek photography that has a strong "artistic" or painterly feel, often leaning toward the experimental or abstract. Material should be a portfolio that demonstrates a clear and consistent aesthetic research path. CLICK HERE

PhotoED Magazine: This publication is dedicated to sharing photography under a creative and educational light, highlighting diverse voices in the Canadian and international community. The project focuses on thematic issues that explore specific social or artistic concepts, encouraging photographers to think about how their work can educate or inspire others. Their mission is to provide a platform for new perspectives on the medium. They seek pitches for articles or portfolios that offer a unique visual or technical insight. They are particularly interested in artists who use photography to explore identity or environmental issues. CLICK HERE

Al-Tiba9: An international platform for contemporary art focusing on the intersection of fashion, performance art, and visual technology. The project is "future-facing" and explores how the body and identity are represented in the modern, technological world through experimental aesthetics. Their mission is to challenge traditional definitions of art and fashion. They seek experimental fashion photography, documentation of performance art, and high-concept visual projects. Material should be visually striking and push the boundaries of the medium, often leaning toward the surreal or the avant-garde. CLICK HERE

Urbanautica: This independent journal of visual anthropology treats the photograph as a tool for geographical, social, and cultural research. The project focuses on the "man-altered" landscape, architecture, and the hidden histories of places, aiming to provide an academic yet highly visual analysis of our environment. Their mission is to explore how we inhabit the world. They seek research-oriented photography focusing on landscape and the built environment. A strong, intellectually grounded text explaining the project's anthropological or geographical goals is essential for any submission. CLICK HERE

C-Heads: A lifestyle magazine focused on natural beauty, youth, and the authentic "analog vibe," celebrating creative freedom and spontaneous moments. The project is intimate, fresh, and often personal, providing a platform for photographers who capture the spirit of contemporary youth culture without pretension. Their mission is to celebrate life and creativity. They seek portraiture and lifestyle photography, often with a vintage or raw feel. They love work that feels authentic, spontaneous, and captures a unique personality or a sense of freedom through the lens. CLICK HERE

Float Magazine: Float is an online space for photographers to share their work without the elitism often found in the traditional art world, supporting a wide range of styles. The project is inclusive and democratic, aiming to provide visibility to emerging talent through online galleries and features that focus on the image above all else. Their mission is to build a supportive global community. They seek "bodies of work" from emerging makers, especially those that show a unique perspective. They are very active in promoting work-in-progress on their site. CLICK HERE

Humble Arts Foundation: A non-profit project dedicated to supporting new photography that challenges traditional conventions and pushes the boundaries of the medium. The project hosts regular open calls and online exhibitions, focusing on fine-art photography that is experimental, conceptually bold, or visually innovative. Their mission is to foster the next generation of art photographers. They seek fine-art photography that is research-based or experimental. They are interested in work that doesn't fit into traditional categories and offers a new way of thinking about the image. CLICK HERE

Socialter: A French magazine dedicated to social and ecological transition, using photography as a tool for political and civil engagement. The project documents the reality of the climate crisis, labor movements, and grassroots resistance, aiming to provoke thought and action through impactful visual storytelling. Their mission is to support the transition to a more sustainable and just world. They seek documentary photography and reportages with a clear social or ecological core. The material must be informative and visually powerful, suitable for supporting investigative journalism with a global reach. CLICK HERE

The Caravan: India's premier journal of slow journalism, The Caravan treats photography with the same investigative depth as its long-form writing. The project aims to uncover structural truths about society through narrative photojournalism that is patient, deep, and profoundly human. Their mission is to document the complexities of power, identity, and life in the modern world. They seek narrative photojournalism and long-form photo essays (usually 15-20 images) with a strong sociological or political weight. Material should be a complete story that offers a unique insight into the human condition. CLICK HERE

Boom Saloon: This is a "creative project with a social heart," using the arts as a vehicle for positive change in communities that are often overlooked. The project collaborates with photographers to create real-world impact initiatives based on the stories they publish, bridging the gap between art and social activism. Their mission is to celebrate resilience and community spirit. They seek photographic stories that narrate community life, cultural resilience, or social progress. They value the "why" behind the images and look for photographers who are deeply connected to the stories they tell. CLICK HERE

The Exposed Magazine: This platform explores the intersection of physical and digital storytelling, using tools like augmented reality to expand the narrative of the printed photo-essay. The project is interested in how different media can interact to create a more immersive experience, blending photography with sound, archives, and digital data. Their mission is to push the boundaries of traditional editorial formats. They seek collaborations with photographers who want to tell multi-layered stories. They are particularly interested in projects that include secondary materials and explore the future of the image. CLICK HERE

Elephant Magazine: Elephant is a vibrant, colorful publication that explores the contemporary art world with an interdisciplinary and accessible approach. The project treats photography as part of a broader dialogue including design, pop culture, and politics, aiming to make the art world feel fun and relevant. Their mission is to document the "why" and "how" of creative life today. They seek photographic projects with a strong "pop" or contemporary aesthetic. They prefer works that explore material culture, the human body, or graphic design, presented as a series of images with a clear hook. CLICK HERE

Polka Magazine: A major French publication bridging the world of high-end photojournalism and the contemporary art gallery with a focus on editorial impact. The project is expansive and journalistic, covering "the world in images" through big stories, major reportages, and auteur-driven essays on the human condition. Their mission is to set the standard for visual journalism in the European scene. They seek powerful reportage and auteur-driven visual stories with significant editorial weight. Submissions should be professional, with high-quality series (15-20 images) and detailed captions. CLICK HERE

Dazed: A legendary youth culture magazine at the radical edge of fashion, music, and art, aiming to disrupt the status quo and reflect the energy of the next generation. The project is a visual manifesto for identity and rebellion, focusing on provocative and boundary-pushing imagery that captures the spirit of the times. Their mission is to be a voice for the unconventional and the brave. They seek provocative portraits, avant-garde fashion editorials, and radical visual projects. Material should be visually daring and reflect the spirit of contemporary subcultures and social shifts. CLICK HERE

i-D: Known for its iconic covers, i-D is a global authority on street style, creative identity, and youth culture, documenting the real faces of global movements. The project favors authenticity and intimacy over polished luxury standards, aiming to celebrate the diversity and spirit of contemporary youth worldwide. Their mission is to be a visual archive of individual style. They seek honest portraiture and subculture documentation that captures the subject's unique soul. They love "real people" photography—work that feels like a raw glimpse into a specific community or life. CLICK HERE

FlakPhoto: A curated online platform that functions as a digital library and promotion network for the contemporary photography community. The project aims to connect artists with a massive global network of curators, editors, and fellow photographers, acting as a vital node in the visual arts web. Their mission is to provide visibility to high-quality work in the digital age. They seek fine-art photography to be promoted across their digital channels. They love work that is intellectually engaging, well-composed, and representative of the current state of the medium. CLICK HERE

Frankie: An Australian magazine celebrating creative and honest stories through a quirky and narrative-driven aesthetic that favors a handcrafted feel. The project avoids commercial slickness, providing a supportive and fun platform for independent creators who tell stories about real people and their passions. Their mission is to celebrate the small, intimate moments of life. They seek photography that tells a personal story, often with a vintage or analog feel. They love quirky portraits and creative still-lifes that feel unpretentious and filled with personality and warmth. CLICK HERE

HOLO: A magazine at the intersection of art, science, and technology, documenting the frontier of human knowledge and the studio practices of innovators. The project is interested in how data and scientific research can be made visible through a sophisticated and futuristic aesthetic. Their mission is to find the wonder in scientific discovery and digital art. They seek long-form documentary photography about research, space exploration, and technological innovation. Material should be technically flawless and treat science as a canvas for high-end artistic expression. CLICK HERE

Carla: A contemporary art magazine based in Los Angeles that has become the definitive voice of the Southern California scene and its global connections. The project covers everything from DIY artist-run spaces to major museum retrospectives, focusing on the unique cultural and visual identity of the West Coast. Their mission is to support the regional artistic community. They seek art photography and project documentation that is "gallery-ready." They love work reflecting California's unique light and space, as well as global projects that resonate with those specific themes. CLICK HERE

Esse Arts + Opinions: A Canadian magazine focusing on how contemporary art intersects with social, political, and philosophical issues through critical inquiry.

The project moves beyond pure aesthetics to look at the "opinion" behind the image, fostering a deep dialogue about the role of art in society today. Their mission is to support art that has a clear social and critical impact. They seek photography that is part of a larger research project or critical inquiry. Material should be sophisticated and intellectually grounded, suitable for an audience of scholars and curators. CLICK HERE

Nka Journal: A peer-reviewed journal of contemporary African art that provides a high-level academic and artistic platform for voices of the African diaspora. The project examines the continent's contribution to global art history and the complexities of modern African identity through a rigorous critical lens. Their mission is to promote African art in a global context. They seek fine-art and documentary photography that explores African history, identity, and contemporary life. Material should be part of a serious artistic practice and have a strong cultural or historical research base. CLICK HERE

Cabinet: A non-profit quarterly that treats each issue as a laboratory for ideas, exploring strange and fascinating parts of history, science, and art. The project is interested in the "curiosity" of the world, often looking at forgotten phenomena or the history of specific objects with playful intellectualism. Their mission is to foster an idiosyncratic cultural dialogue. They seek research-based photography that treats the camera as an inquiry tool. They love projects looking at the "history of things" or unusual artifacts, presented with a strong conceptual link. CLICK HERE

Artlink: A quarterly themed magazine covering contemporary art and ideas from Australia and the Asia-Pacific region with a focus on social and ecological issues. The project is committed to exploring indigenous rights and cultural shifts, providing a critical platform for art that engages with the real world. Their mission is to foster regional artistic dialogue. They seek photography and proposals for essays that relate to their specific themes. Material should have a strong social hook and be accompanied by a text that links the work to current regional debates. CLICK HERE

Lodestars Anthology: A "slow" travel magazine that focuses on one country per issue, taking a deep and poetic look at its culture through atmosphere rather than tourism. The project aims to capture the "soul" of a place through timeless and soft imagery that evokes a sense of wonder and human connection. Their mission is to celebrate the beauty of travel as discovery. They seek poetic travel photography—details, quiet landscapes, and intimate portraits that feel like a quiet journey. Material should be a series of images that favor natural light and a thoughtful perspective. CLICK HERE

The Adventure Handbook: This travel platform rejects "influencer" culture, focusing on the grit, dirt, and authentic stories of the road—what they call "authentic adventure." The project is about the struggle and the raw experience of travel, valuing the real human story over the perfect postcard shot or filtered image. Their mission is to document the reality of exploration. They seek "dirty" travel photography—real survival stories, remote hiking, and wild nature without filters. Material should be raw, unpolished, and accompanied by a strong first-person narrative. CLICK HERE

LENSCRATCH: Founded and edited by Aline Smithson, Lenscratch is a daily online journal that celebrates the global photographic community with a focus on fine-art photography. The project is renowned for its supportive, artist-centric approach, providing a high-visibility stage for both established photographers and emerging voices. Their mission is to explore the creative possibilities of the medium while fostering a sense of community through in-depth features and thematic exhibitions. They are one of the most respected platforms for "unsolicited" work, as they review submissions year-round for their "Featured Artist" posts. They seek cohesive bodies of work (10-15 images) accompanied by a professional artist statement and bio. They value work that shows a unique personal vision, a high level of craft, and a clear conceptual thread, often favoring series that feel like they could exist as a physical book. CLICK HERE

Monocle: A global affairs and lifestyle magazine that has built a premium brand around the idea of the sophisticated global citizen and urban functioning. Their project is clean, optimistic, and corporate-chic, focusing on "how to live well" through a very tidy and globalist aesthetic that celebrates progress. Their mission is to provide a curated view of global quality. They seek photography of architecture, urban design, and global business leaders. Material should be technically perfect, well-lit, and carry a sense of professional elegance and a high-end commercial feel. CLICK HERE

Self Publish, Be Happy: An organization dedicated to the celebration of the self-published book as a primary medium for artistic expression in the digital age. The project is a response to the virtual world, re-valuing the physical object and the DIY ethos of the independent photography scene globally. Their mission is to support the community of self-publishers. They seek self-published zines and books for review and promotion. Material should be submitted as a finished physical or digital mockup of a publication, emphasizing the book as a complete work of art. CLICK HERE

Exit Magazine: A Spanish quarterly where each issue is dedicated to a single theme, aiming to be a visual encyclopedia of contemporary photography for the art world. The project is highly respected for its academic and curatorial depth, featuring portfolios that define the historical state of the medium today. Their mission is to document the evolution of the photograph. They seek fine-art photography portfolios for their themed issues. Material should be part of a serious artistic practice and fit for an audience of scholars, curators, and collectors. CLICK HERE

Communication Arts: One of the world's most respected magazines for visual communicators, showcasing excellence in advertising, design, and commercial photography. The project is a benchmark for the industry, focusing on high technical skill and the professional impact of the creative image on the global market. Their mission is to celebrate professional excellence. They seek photography that shows professional-level craft and original thinking. While they have awards, they also feature stories on the health and trends of the global photographic industry. CLICK HERE

The Earth Issue: An environmentalist initiative and publication focusing on the intersection of art and activism to raise awareness about the climate crisis. The project believes beauty can be a powerful driver for ecological change, providing a platform for creators who engage with nature and social justice. Their mission is to inspire action through visual storytelling. They seek photography that explores the human-nature relationship and documents environmental challenges, favoring experimental and research-based works. CLICK HERE

The Photographic Journal (TPJ): TPJ is a platform that prioritizes the "human" element of photography, moving away from purely technical or commercial aesthetics. The project is dedicated to the art of the photo essay and long-form visual storytelling, often featuring works that are deeply personal, introspective, or socially observant. They aim to provide a space where photographers can present a complete vision rather than just a single highlight. Their mission is to bridge the gap between digital immediacy and the depth of traditional journalism. They seek cohesive series (15-25 images) that are accompanied by a strong narrative or personal reflection. They value photographers who have a clear, honest voice and projects that feel like a complete chapter of a larger story. CLICK HERE

Eyeshot Magazine: Founded with a focus on street and documentary photography, Eyeshot has grown into a prestigious international publisher of high-quality monographs and collective issues. The project is dedicated to capturing "the decisive moment" and the raw reality of the human environment across the globe. Their mission is to support street photographers by providing a high-end platform that treats the genre with the same respect as fine art. They are constantly looking for new talent for their digital showcases and printed volumes. They seek series that demonstrate a unique graphic eye, social intuition, or a bold approach to documenting public life. They are particularly interested in long-term projects that can be developed into a dedicated publication. CLICK HERE

In the In-Between (In-B): This digital journal and platform serves as a critical resource for contemporary "lens-based" art, focusing on the intersection of photography and fine art. The project is dedicated to providing in-depth analysis and high-visibility features for artists whose work challenges the boundaries of the medium. Their mission is to foster a critical dialogue around the image, moving beyond the surface to explore the conceptual and historical roots of a project. They seek portfolio submissions for their "Featured Artists" section. They look for work that is research-based, conceptually rigorous, and aesthetically sophisticated, accompanied by a professional artist statement that articulates the intellectual framework of the series. Black+White Photography (UK): This iconic British magazine is the leading title for monochrome imagery, celebrating the timeless power and technical craft of the black-and-white print. The project covers a wide spectrum of genres, from classic landscape and street photography to contemporary fine art and experimental works. Their mission is to champion the aesthetic of black and white in a world of digital color, providing a platform for both established masters and new voices. They are open to unsolicited submissions for several of their recurring sections, such as "Portfolio" and "Appreciation." They seek high-quality monochrome series that demonstrate a deep understanding of light, contrast, and composition, regardless of whether they were shot on film or digital. CLICK HERE

Over Journal: Over is a critical journal of photography and visual culture that seeks to move the conversation beyond the traditional "gallery-style" presentation. The project is focused on the socio-political impact of images, exploring how photography can be used as a tool for resistance, education, and cultural critique. Their mission is to provide a platform for work that is intellectually demanding and visually innovative, often focusing on the ethics of representation. They seek proposals for visual projects and critical essays that tackle contemporary global issues. They are particularly interested in artists who use photography to explore themes of power, post-colonialism, and the digital environment. CLICK HERE

Harper's Magazine (Photography): While primarily known as a prestigious literary and political monthly, Harper's has a long history of featuring world-class photography that documents the state of the modern world. The project values the "intellectual" image—photography that serves as a visual counterpart to deep investigative journalism and cultural commentary. Their mission is to provide a window into the human condition through a curated selection of artistic and documentary work. They are open to receiving pitches and portfolios for their editorial sections. They seek photography that is socially relevant, narratively complex, and capable of standing alone as a significant piece of visual storytelling in a high-level intellectual context. CLICK HERE

Silvershotz: Silvershotz is an international art photography magazine that treats every issue as a curated gallery experience, focusing on high-end production and visual excellence. The project aims to provide a premium space for photographers to showcase complete portfolios (10-15 images) rather than fragmented single shots. Their mission is to celebrate the diversity of global photography by highlighting artists who have a strong, distinct signature. They are open to submissions from all genres, provided the work is part of a finished, professional project. They seek series that demonstrate a high degree of artistic maturity and a unique aesthetic approach that sets the artist apart in the contemporary scene. CLICK HERE

Square Magazine: This unique publication is entirely dedicated to the square format (1:1), celebrating the specific compositional challenges and aesthetic qualities of this frame. The project is a tribute to both the history of medium format film and the modern digital square aesthetic, providing a platform for fine-art and experimental photography. Their mission is to explore how the constraints of the square can lead to innovative visual solutions. They accept submissions for their quarterly issues from photographers worldwide. They seek cohesive series that were either shot or thoughtfully cropped to the 1:1 format, with a focus on projects that show a strong sense of balance, geometry, and artistic intent. CLICK HERE

Minimalism Magazine: This platform is a sanctuary for those who appreciate the "less is more" philosophy in visual art. The project is dedicated to photography that explores simplicity, negative space, and the reduction of subjects to their essential elements. Their mission is to promote a calm, organized, and graphic way of seeing the world through the lens of contemporary minimalism. They are very active in scouting new talent through their website and social media channels. They seek photography characterized by clean lines, a limited color palette, and a strong focus on form. Submissions can range from architecture and landscape to still-life and abstract portraiture. CLICK HERE

Social Documentary Network (SDN): This platform is one of the world's leading venues for documentary photography that addresses critical social, political, and environmental issues. The project was founded on the belief that visual power can be used to educate the public and foster global change. Unlike platforms that look for single "hero" shots, SDN is a home for complete photo essays and in-depth visual narratives. Their mission is to connect photographers, NGOs, and the general public through honest and ethical storytelling that has a real-world impact. They constantly accept new submissions for their online galleries, many of which are later selected for their prestigious print publication, ZEKE Magazine. They seek comprehensive series (from 6 to 30 images) accompanied by detailed captions and introductory texts that explore the human condition or global challenges with integrity and depth. CLICK HERE

Afterimage: The Journal of Media Arts and Cultural Criticism: Published by the University of California Press, Afterimage is a high-level academic and artistic journal that explores the intersection of photography, video, and digital media. The project is focused on the critical and social implications of media arts, favoring work that is research-based and intellectually rigorous. Their mission is to provide a serious space for the analysis of visual culture. They seek submissions for their "Portfolio" and "Essays" sections. They are interested in artists who use photography to explore complex themes such as digital ethics, political history, or cultural identity, and whose work benefits from a critical, theoretical context. CLICK HERE

The Woven Tale Press: This is a monthly digital and print publication that brings together the best of contemporary art and literature, providing a multidisciplinary platform for creative voices. The project treats photography as a cornerstone of visual art, often featuring in-depth portfolios that act as a visual narrative alongside poetry and prose. Their mission is to celebrate the creative spirit across all boundaries. They seek fine-art photography portfolios for their monthly issues. They look for work that has a strong poetic or narrative quality, favoring series that feel evocative and show a consistent, professional artistic direction. CLICK HERE

Burn Magazine: Founded by Magnum photographer David Alan Harvey, Burn is an iconic platform for "the next generation" of emerging photographers. The project is legendary for its focus on auteur-driven documentary and personal visual storytelling, prioritizing emotion and vision over commercial polish. Their mission is to provide a launching pad for artists who have a story to tell and the courage to tell it in a unique way. They are famous for their "Daily Dispatches" and "Features," which are selected from unsolicited submissions. They seek cohesive, powerful projects (usually 15-20 images) that demonstrate a raw, authentic, and highly individual photographic voice. CLICK HERE

LensCulture (Editors' Picks & Network): While widely renowned for its prestigious global awards, LensCulture offers one of the most powerful windows in the world for unsolicited submissions through its free account system. By uploading their work, photographers have the opportunity to be scouted by the editorial team for the "Editors' Picks" section, which provides immediate visibility to a global network of curators, festival directors, and photo editors. The project is committed to discovering the best in contemporary photography in all its forms, from raw photojournalism to conceptual fine art. Their mission is to provide artists with the tools and exposure necessary to advance their careers to a professional level. They seek image series that demonstrate a clear vision and a mastery of visual language, with a specific focus on works that tell universal stories through a deeply personal perspective. CLICK HERE
